Theragenics deal on ice...plenty of value nonetheless

Erratum 2013E – Numbers corrected.

On March 17th, EZAG announced it had submitted a non-binding proposal to acquire all of the outstanding stock of Theragenics for USD 2.20 per share, representing a 38.4% premium over Theragenics' closing price, and a 15.8% premium over the 52-week high.

According to our analysis, the proposal, carrying a total transaction value of USD 72.1m (€ 51.2m), valued Theragenics at 9.7x EBIT would have added € 2.0 to our current price target. The acquisition of Theragenics would propel EZAG to a No. 2 or No.3 position in the global brachytherapy market.

Given a poison pill program, EZAG cannot go hostile without changing the statutes to the company, which requires shareholder and/or supervisory board support and onerous legal expenses involved with the proxy fights, breach of fiduciary duty law suits or other means to break those barriers. The Board of Theragenics rejected the offer in a letter dated March 25.

EZAG reserves itself the right to come back in the future with a new offer, according to the press release, which means a deal is not to be excluded in the longer term.

Excluding this transaction, EZAG remains a very attractive story. This defensive, nuclear medicine story remains fundamentally undervalued at an EV/EBIT 2011E of 6.7x. On a recent roadshow to Paris, the CEO indicated the company would remain acquisitive in 2011 even absent Theragenics.

Potential in RadPharm with endocrine tracers, gallium generators as well as better profitability following the integration of Nuclitec and IBt support organic top line and margin developments. BUY PT € 38.50 on FCF Yield 2011E (€ 44.5 on FCF Yield 2012E).
